Huge HK rally backs students

Up to 600,000 call on Li Peng to quit

By ANDY HO, CHRIS YEUNG and JOHN TANG

HUNDREDS of thousands of Hongkong residents yesterday voted with their feet to express solidarity with the Beijing students in an historic round-the-island march, demanding the resignation of Chinese Premier Li Peng.

"Although we don't have any official figures, we have made a brief estimate that the crowds would be in the region of 500,000 to 600,000," a police spokesman said.

Tens of thousands watched the eight-hour march along the more than 15-kilometre procession from Central to North Point. It was the largest demonstration in the history of Hongkong.

Wearing head-bands and holding banners, the sea of protesters kept chanting slogans such as "Down with Li Peng" from the time the procession left Chater Garden at 2.15 pm.

The massive but peaceful protest ended at 10.30 pm after a mass rally at Happy Valley race course, which was packed with people from all walks of life.

ic Pro-democracy Movement, was inaugurated at the rally.

The Alliance hailed the march as Hongkong's answer to the "People Power of the Philippines" as politicians, students, workers, farmers, pop singers, among others, closed ranks to lend their support to the Chinese students.

In a four-point statement, they demanded that:

- The People's Liberation Army (PLA) should not fight against Chinese people.
- All Chinese people need not be pessimistic but should launch a long-term peaceful struggle for democracy.
- The Chinese National People's Congress (NPC) should hold an urgent session to overrule the decision of Mr Li and to recognise the patriotic student movement.
- The Chinese troops should withdraw immediately.

Among the participants were local officials of the New China News Agency and left-wing papers, Ta Kung Pao and New Evening Post. They voiced their anger over the crackdown on the pro-democracy movement.

An Alliance leader, legislator Sze Ho Wah, urged all residents to call up at least 10 relatives on the mainland to use every means to protect the students at Tiananmen Square.

He demanded that local NPC delegates hold an emergency meeting on the imminent military suppression of students.

Mr Sze, who also heads the Professional Teachers' Union, also urged his 42,000 members to be prepared to launch a class boycott if any of the Chinese students are hurt.

The race course rally began shortly after dusk while thousands of demonstrators were still in action on the streets.

Among the last batches of marchers to join the rally were members of the 170,000-member left-wing Federation of Trade Unions (FTU), who arrived shortly after 9.30 pm.

FTU chairman Cheng Yiu-tong told the rally: "Beijing students sacrifice their bodies to contribute to the future and the democratic development of the country."

"We should learn from them and cherish and protect their patriotism," he said.

Another speaker, Legislative Councillor Martin Lee Chu-ming said: "Any patriotic Chinese will support the demands of the Beijing students."

"The Government has tarnished the patriotic move of the Beijing students when they likened it to the Cultural Revolution."

"Li Peng should apologise before the 1.1 billion Chinese people and step down. The only thing he can do now is to resign," he said.

Film director John Shum Kin-fan, who spoke for some 200 show business personalities, said: "We might not be well-versed in politics. But the blood flowing inside our bodies is the blood of Chinese."

"We love democracy and the rule of law. But Li Peng defied democracy by refusing to talk to students and defied the rule of law by imposing a news blackout."

"We will become today's students in Beijing in the future if we don't speak out now," he told the crowd.

A leader of the independent Federation of Hongkong and Kowloon Labour Groups, Mr Lee Kai-ming said: "Workers have been described as the silent majority. We can no longer remain silent. Workers should join up to back the democratic cause of students because China's future lies with them."

The former president of the Maritime Law Enforcement Headquarters said troops had been "somewhat blocked" from enforcing martial law declared on Saturday.

"The troops imposing martial law must firmly carry out orders of the Government and they have the duty to adopt very effective measures to put an end to the situation," the statement broadcast on radio, television and by the official New China News Agency said.

But an immediate invasion of Tiananmen Square, the heart of mass pro-democracy demonstrations that have intensified over the past eight days, was less likely, they believed.

The People's Liberation Army (PLA) command's statement stressed that the troops were not being sent against the "patriotic students but against criminal elements in the city."

The square prepares for military move

CHINA'S martial law authorities moved yesterday the army must restore order in Beijing and diplomats said they believed troops would take action in the capital within hours.

A statement from the Maritime Law Enforcement Headquarters said troops had been "somewhat blocked" from enforcing martial law declared on Saturday.

"The troops imposing martial law must firmly carry out orders of the Government and they have the duty to adopt very effective measures to put an end to the situation," the statement broadcast on radio, television and by the official New China News Agency said.

The People's Liberation Army (PLA) command's statement stressed that the troops were not being sent against the "patriotic students but against criminal elements in the city."

About 100,000 student hunger strikers, workers and residents occupying the PLA, was also quoted as denying the rumours.

Students yesterday handed out cotton surgical face masks in preparation for an expected tear-gas attack from military helicopters which had circled overhead.

The street loudspeaker announced that their union rejected any ultimatum to leave and called on the protesters to remain calm and restraining.

"We call on all of you to come stand with us," a student said after the announcement.

The students are very weak and they need the people of Beijing to help them," Tensions rose sharply among students in the square last night as a report circulated saying Mr Li had ordered the plaza cleared by 5 am (4 am Hongkong time).

A three-point statement attributed to Mr Li was read out on the public address system put up by the students.

It said:

- The students must leave the square.
- The city cleaners will move in at 5 am to clean up.
- Beijing prisons have been cleared to receive any students remaining on the square after 5 am.

Troops occupied major state-run news organisations and scaled off Beijing by locking up roadblocks.

Convoys of lorries and vans carrying troops stood on roads into the capital for a second day surrounded by thousands of students, workers and peasants blocking their way by sitting in highways and erecting barricades of buses.

The troops made no attempt to break through, although 40 students were reported to have been injured in a clash with a group of People's Armed Police who got off their bus to try to clear a way through the crowd.

Democrats urge Cha to repudiate model

By VIOLA LEE and JOHN TANG

CONTRVERSIAL publisher Louis Cha, advocate of a conservative democratic model for Hongkong after 1997, has resigned from both the Basic Law Drafting and Consultative Committees as the crisis in Beijing remained unresolved.

Mr Cha, owner of the Ming Pao newspaper, published the local branch of the New China News Agency in his decision to quit both the Basic Law bodies but gave no reason.

Mr Cha's resignation was viewed with reservation by fellow drafter Mr Martin Lee Chu-ming, who said Mr Cha should have repudiated his conservative post-1997 political model before resigning.

Mr Cha had proposed to postpone introducing universal suffrage for selecting the future chief executive and the legislature for 15 years after the 1997 changeover.

Mr Lee said: "Bearing in mind that he had been until recently one of the BLDC special group co-convenors on political structure, he could see that his proposal had been attacked widely in Hongkong."

"Just by resigning from the BLDC and BLCC without doing more is not a fair thing to do, because at least he should have tried to do something about the political model," Mr Lee said.

He said Mr Cha should have expressed regret for putting forward the conservative model.

Mr Lee said he could play a more positive role in striving for greater democracy for Hongkong by remaining on the Beijing-appointed BLCC.

Fellow liberal drafter, Mr Sze Ho Wah, took a similar line.

Meanwhile, Mr Ho Sze-chu, a Hongkong delegate to the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference, said he would consider resigning if China resorted to a military crackdown.

"I will try to make use of all possible channels to influence China against causing bloodshed and harming lives," he said.

"Should that fail, there is no point for me to remain as a member. I shall then resign."

He urged Chinese Communist Party secretary-general Zhao Ziyang not to resign.

Mr Ho said China's crisis could be resolved if Mr Zhao was invited to come out and appeal to the students to end their month-old protests.

Another CPPCC delegate, Mrs Peggy Pei Lam, said: "I do not rule out resigning as a protest against violent suppression."

Mr Lam said she would still to discharge her duty if the clear local voice against violence was unheeded.

However, Basic Law drafter and liberal legislator Mr Sze Ho Wah said he certainly would continue his fight for democracy within the BLDC.

Another drafter, Miss Lin Yin-chu, who is a BLCC deputy, said: "I will use the last drop of my energy to do the utmost."

CPPCC member, Mr Ng Tze-tai, said it was irresponsible to resign when China was facing a crisis.

Mr Ng offered to go to Beijing to represent Hongkong CPPCC members as a go-between to negotiate between the Chinese Government and the students.

Mr Wong Po-yan, a BLCC member, said the idea of resigning had occurred to him when he heard that curfew was imposed in Beijing.

But he later decided against the idea, saying: "It will be better to have somebody working for the benefit of Hongkong than taking a passive attitude by resigning," he said.

He said he would use proper channels to express his dissatisfaction with the Chinese Government for using the curfew to suppress the student movement.

Mr Wong said he found it unnecessary for Mr Cha to resign, or for the Beijing students to carry on with their hunger strike.

Bond pays dividend

ALAN Bond's Hongkong International Limited (BCL) will pay a special dividend to shareholders from the $1 billion profits it will make from the sale of its flagship building, the Bond Centre, it was announced yesterday.

The company is also planning to put some of the money back into Hongkong property. Directors of the company will meet to set the level of the dividend on Thursday.

There have been widespread fears that BCL would use the money to buy an asset from its cash-starved Australian parent company, Bond Corp Holdings, and local investors increased to see BCL if it did so.

Soviets expel 11 Britons in 'mirror' spy row retaliation

MOSCOW: Eleven Britons have been ordered to leave the Soviet Union as a fresh espionage row erupted over the weekend, dealing a sudden blow to relations which Britain said had been flourishing.

The British ambassador in Moscow, Sir Rodric Braithwaite, said the Soviet Union was expelling eight British diplomats and three journalists in a "mirror image" of a previously unannounced move by the Foreign Office on Friday.

He named the three British journalists, whom he had informed earlier yesterday, on Sunday as Angus Roxburgh of the Sunday Times, Ian Glover-James of Independent Television News, and Jeremy Harris of the British Broadcasting Corporation (BBC).

A further three diplomats, who had already left the country, have been declared persona non grata.

In London, a Foreign Office spokesman confirmed that eight Soviet diplomats and three journalists had been ordered out and that three other Soviet officials currently out of the country would not be allowed back.

"This is particularly regrettable at a moment when Anglo-Soviet relations were better than at any time in the past," the spokesman said.

He added that the Soviet officials had been involved in "activities incompatible with their status" diplomatic parlance for spying.

The Foreign Office spokesman refused to say if Britain was considering retaliatory expulsions on this occasion.

Let's take this one stage at a time," he said.

In the past, Moscow usually responded to expulsions of its officials by ordering out a lower number of officials from the country in question. But under Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev, its policy has been to reciprocate man for man.

If there were any further expulsions from London, Moscow would be almost certain to respond in kind.

Sir Rodric said the Soviet move was without "objective justification" but suggested Britain was anxious to avoid a major row.

Masses keep soldiers out of city

BEIJING: Chinese martial-law authorities warned yesterday that the army must restore order in Beijing and elsewhere if they believed troops would take action in the capital within hours.

A statement from the Martial Law Enforcement Headquarters said troops had been "somewhat blocked" from enforcing martial law declared on Saturday.

"The troops imposing martial law must firmly carry out orders of the government and they have the duty to adopt very effective measures to put an end to the situation," the statement broadcast on radio and television and by the official Xinhua News Agency said.

Among the hundreds of thousands of students still in and around Tiananmen Square there was a feeling of growing fear as belief grew that authorities had decided the end of their peacetime and were prepared to come down hard on the protesters.

The student radio had broadcast a two-point statement attributed to Premier Li Peng that the students must quit the square by 5pm, that demonstrators would be sent in to sweep the plaza clean at that hour and space had been cleared in Beijing's prisons for 200,000 people.

Witnesses said the atmosphere was approaching panic. A few scuffles broke out between students and student marshals trying to maintain order. The loudspeaker system squawked with a stream of announcements.

"They're panicking," a Chinese observer said. "They're broadcasting every rumour across the square. They should calm down a bit. I don't think the army is going to come in."

One vitally distraught student activist said, "We don't want to use violence but if the tanks come we may have to defend ourselves with our fists."

In open defiance of martial law, Beijing residents continued to block major intersections around the capital during the day.

"We're here to thrust the army back to the outskirts of the city, if they do come at all," said a factory worker in his 30s at a roadblock in northeastern Beijing.

Martial law was imposed on Saturday after millions of people in the capital and other cities staged the biggest protests since the beginning of communist rule in 1949.

Despite the order, more than 200,000 demonstrators remained in occupation of the 40-hectare square yesterday.

On the Third Ring Road encircling the capital, citizens said they broke into a bus depot nearby and pushed seven large empty buses up the road into barricade position.

Two hundred workers gathered in the centre of a firm formed by the buses, and trucks driven in by sympathetic drivers.

They said they would confront the army directly if it tried to break through their lines.

"We're not afraid of the army's guns," said a middle-aged housewife.

"There are so many of us supporting the students."

Witnesses reported similar scenes throughout the city, with thousands of people gathering at intersections closer to Tiananmen Square.

The people manning the roadblocks swarmed over any car trying to drive through the lines, questioning the driver and checking identification.

Demonstrators dragged concrete blocks into the middle of the Avenue of Eternal Peace, Beijing's main thoroughfare, to block off but bicycle traffic from the broad street leading to the square.

The protesters screamed "You can't let them" when cars tried to drive through.

Even the ambulances that have been steadily arriving to hospitalise hunger-striking students at the centre of the protests had to drive up onto the pavement to pass through, witnesses said.

"The state of anarchy in Beijing in the last few days has been getting ever more serious," said a spokesman for the Beijing municipal government.

"The situation has seriously affected people of the whole city in their work, production, study and life order."

He said troops would go to the city's campuses, but said there was no plan to control the universities.

Residents swept from one end of Tiananmen Square to the other throughout the day, some saying troops would be sent in to clear the square, others that they would come through the city's underground railway system.

The commitment of Mr Li's troops to their task seemed in doubt from the very beginning of the vast military operation when thousands began striking in the masses on Friday night.

Students at the forefront of the nationwide pro-democracy movement climbed over army trucks, making political speeches, giving soldiers tea and cigarettes, and appealing for unity.

China Central television said last night that seven students had visited the home of Marshal Xu Xiangpan and had been told troops were "absolutely unwilling" to have blood on their hands over the protest.

Agencies called to announce both sets of casualties.

Mr Rodric, the embassy's political counsellor, said Sir Rodric was summoned to the Soviet Foreign Ministry on Saturday night and told that 11 British nationals - eight diplomats and three journalists - would have to leave Moscow within 11 days.

Marchers in Hong Kong's biggest-ever protest raise their fists in defiant support of Beijing students.

No blood will be spilled, Hong pledges

CHINA'S paramount leader, Mr Deng Xiaoping, has written letters to Mr Deng, showing their unwillingness to suppress the students," sources said.

But there had been a split of opinion on how to handle the student movement within the military, it is believed.

The Beijing Military Area Command, the top Army division and with reportedly refused to use force against the students.

At the same time, party General Secretary, Mr Zhao Ziyang, was making an 11th hour bid to keep his power, sources said.

Marshal Nie Hongzheng and Xu Xiangpan, reportedly made an urgent long-distance call to Mr Deng in Wuhan, immediately after Premier Li Peng signed the martial law order.

Both respectable military leaders and old friends of Mr Deng, the two marshals appealed to him not to use force against the students.

Marshal Nie, who had close relations with late former party chief, Mr Hu Yaobang, had warned Mr Deng that a crackdown on the students would badly ruin his reputation.

Marshal Nie, according to sources, said, "Whoever opens fire at the students, he will be fired at in turn."

"In reply to their phone calls, Mr Deng said he should be avoided," the source said.

Analysis said Mr Deng's remarks only indicated he would try to avoid bloodshed, but it did not mean martial law would be lifted or troops would be withdrawn.

"Mr Deng left for Wuhan on Saturday to convene a meeting of senior military area commanders to discuss the current situation and to seek a united opinion from the army," the source said.

At the same time, party General Secretary, Mr Zhao Ziyang, was making an 11th hour bid to keep his power, sources said.

ABOUT one million people yesterday marched through Hong Kong's streets to protest against the Chinese Government's crackdown on the students' democratic movement.

The high turnout surprised police and overjoyed rally organisers - it was by far the largest crowd ever assembled in the territory.

The march began at 2pm at Chater Garden and wound like a giant snake to the Happy Valley Racecourse where a rally was held.

When the rally ended at 10.30pm several thousand people, caught up by the emotion of the occasion and the clear sense that they were making history, gathered at the local branch of the Xinhua news agency to further push their cause.

The marchers came from all walks of life - students mingled with workers, teachers marched alongside the elderly, parents mixed with pop stars, parents took their children.

For most of them it was the first time that they had ever attended a political rally.

They were attracted to the march by press advertisements, radio broadcasts and the slogans of fellow demonstrators.

The further the procession went the larger it grew. Builders climbed down from their scaffolding to join the march, clerks left their offices, shopkeepers closed their doors.

Wearing headbands and carrying home-made banners, the marchers loudly chanted slogans, the most popular of which was "Long live Mr Li Peng Li Peng step down!"

They also shouted "Long live democracy!" and "The situation is not as serious as it is being made out to be."

Although extensively to support of the students the march also underlined other concerns.

Drafter Cha quits key positions

WITH China facing a major political crisis which has spilled over into Hong Kong, Mr Louis Cha has resigned from his posts on both the Basic Law drafting and consultative committees.

In a surprise move, Mr Cha - who is a proponent of the controversial "Cha-Cha" political model for the new Hong Kong government - issued a statement early yesterday saying he had resigned from the Standing Committee of China's National People's Congress and a member of the 36-strong HLD.

At the same time, he also resigned from the Basic Law Consultative Committee and the HLD's 19-member executive committee.

Mr Cha, chairman of the Ming Pao Group of newspapers and also a co-receiver of the HLD's political sub-group did not give reasons and could not be reached for comment yesterday.

He is the first drafter to resign from the committee since its inception more than three years ago.

If his resignation is accepted by the NPC's standing committee, which appoints members of the drafting committee, it will be a big blow for the Chinese authorities.

They will have to find a replacement while local disagreements over the post-1997 political structure in the Basic Law still have to be resolved.

The final round of consultations on the Basic Law is due to end in July and the mini-constitution will be promulgated carry on to take forward, preferring instead to wait.

Brokers said yesterday's demonstration in Hong Kong would have further eroded overseas confidence in the local house.

In the longer term, the trend for Hong Kong firms to relocate is likely to accelerate.

His resignation was submitted to NPC chairman, Mr Ji Pengfei, and the chairman of the NPC standing committee, Mr Wan Li, who is overseas.

Investors set to act quickly

HONGKONG'S financial community is set to react swiftly to the weekend's events in China with most stockbrokers expecting share prices to plunge when the stock exchange opens for business today.

Last Friday the Hang Seng Index shed four percent in reaction to the worsening situation and that was before the imposition of martial law and a blackout on news.

Self instructions from foreign investors will lead the way this morning as institutions pull their money out. Potential buyers are unlikely to take business, preferring instead to wait.

Moscow expels Britons in retaliation

MOSCOW: The Soviet Union ordered eight British diplomats and three journalists expelled for alleged spying activities, the British Foreign Office said yesterday.

The move follows the expulsion of identical number of Soviet diplomats and three journalists ordered out by the British government on Friday.

Britain denounced the Soviet move as "retaliatory" and "a serious breach of international law".

Mr Rodric, the embassy's political counsellor, said Sir Rodric was summoned to the Soviet Foreign Ministry on Saturday night and told that 11 British nationals - eight diplomats and three journalists - would have to leave Moscow within 11 days.

The previous day, Soviet ambassador, Mr Lennid Zlotin, was called into the British Foreign Office in London and told that 11 Soviet in Britain were ordered to leave within 11 days.

Agencies called to announce both sets of casualties.

Good Morning

Today, Page 2 of The Hong Kong Standard takes on an informative and entertaining new look.

Informative, because it is packed with facts that busy Hongkongers need to know - air movements (direct by destination, not as previously, by airline), useful business numbers, where to find emergency help and make a complaint, and what's good on television.

Entertaining, because along with some excellent reading - a daily Observer column and news and pictures about people, you'll also find a crowd, your fortune in the stars, and Garry Larson's hilarious Far Side cartoon. It's all in the new Page 2. Good morning.

WEATHER: 25°C - 29°C. Mainly cloudy. Details on Page 19
